Excerpt: . The claim is made that credit business creates loyalty and assures the merchant a larger share of business. Does it? Have you ever had it happen that one of your credit customers brought a load of hogs to market, came to you to get his usual stock of flour, coffee, tea and maybe a little tobacco, said, Charge it, and then went home to spend the evening with his family poring over a mail-order catalog? The country merchant's strongest competitor is the mail-order house. It has long been argued that credit was a means of meeting mail-order competition; but it is now at least an open question if retail credit, granted by the country merchant, is not the mail-order concern's greatest help. Under the credit system the country merchant supplies what the farmer needs for immediate consumption; and the farmer sends his...
